ACCEPTING THE MOUNTAIN'S CHALLENGE: DARING CLIMBERS, Fastened Together With Rope, Negotiating the Almost Vertical Cliffs of Mount Robson, Where the Slightest Slip Might Have Resulted in Maiming or Death.

MOUNTAIN climbing as a quest for scientific information dates back to 1786, when Jacques Balmat first scaled Mont Blanc. As a sport it is much more modern, as the first Alpine club composed of amateurs was formed in London in 1857. Since that time similar organizations in various countries have enrolled an aggregate of more than 150,000 members. About 12,000 of these enthusiasts compose the Bureau of Associated Mountaineering Clubs of North America, with which the Alpine Club of Canada is affiliated.

The recent feat of members of the latter organization in scaling for the first time the topmost peak of Mount Robson, the highest summit in British Columbia, Canada, 13,068 feet above sea level, was a notable achievement, the more so as two women, one an American, took part in the climb. In places the ascent was almost vertical, and the axe, rope and alpenstock were in constant requisition. But they achieved their goal successfully, and peril and exertion were forgotten in the exultant thrill of standing on the top of the Canadian world.

The "Big Fours" of America and Great Britain Who Meet at Meadow Brook

By J. R. Vidmer.

EDWARD ALBERT, Prince of Wales, may hold the centre of the stage up to a certain point at Meadow Brook next Saturday, when the American and British polo teams meet in the first match for the historic International Challenge Cup, but beyond that point interest will centre on the flying horsemen, once more struggling for supremacy as they have struggled since 1886. It is a colorful lot of players who have been chosen to represent their respective nations in the classic, and plenty of action is assured, no matter what the score.

Devereux Milburn, veteran of five international struggles, will lead the Americans from the position of back, and "Doc" is called the greatest player the game has ever known. His drives carry far, and, although he may not have a perfect seat in the saddle, his riding is daring, and what he lacks in horsemanship he makes up by the will to get to the ball when he is needed.

Pitted against him as the No. 1 for Great Britain will be either Lieut. Col. T. P. Melvill or Major T. W. Kirkwood, and their task of scoring against the great Milburn is not one to be relished. Melvill, a slight rider, is nevertheless agile, and he has proven on the polo field and on the battlefield that he is fearless. He has played against the American Captain before, having been on the British Army team which visited this country last Fall, and he knows what to expect. Kirkwood, on the other hand, is a newcomer, and should he be finally selected to lead the British attack he will find a strange and formidable foe to pass.

Tommy Hitchcock Jr. will be the American No. 2, and although he is only 24, he is already a veteran internationalist, having played for America in 1921, when the cup was brought back to this country. Tommy's father played on the first American team to meet Great Britain's horsemen and he comes by his polo ability naturally. During the World War he was an aviator, first with the famous Lafayette Escadrille and later with the American Air Service. He was shot down after winning two battles in the air and taken prisoner, but even that misfortune couldn't keep him in check, for he escaped from the guard and made his way back to safety.

If the whole German Army couldn't hold him, what chance will the British leader, Major F. B. Hurndall, have? But Major Hurndall, who will play No. 3 for the challengers, has been through some harrowing experiences himself. In 1918 he was torpedoed off the coast of Ireland, and when he was finally picked up, floating in the water, he was given up for dead. But a nun rubbed his chilled body for three hours with alcohol and revived the last glow of life which was believed by the doctors not to exist.

While Milburn will be a hard obstacle in the way of the British attack, the Americans also will have a formidable barrier to pass in order to make their way toward the invaders' goal. Luis Lacey of the Argentine has been called from his South American home to bear the burden of defense for Great Britain. The dark-skinned star, born in Canada and therefore eligible for the British team, has shown his strength in the United States before when he came here in 1922 and helped the four horsemen of the Argentine win the American open championship. A recurrence of an old injury has recently kept Lacey out of the game, and it is possible that Major Lockett may have to take his place.

The task of outmanoeuvring Lacey or his substitute will be assigned to the dexterous J. Watson Webb, the last of the left-handers, who will play No. 1 for the Americans. "Wats" does not carry the power in his mallet that do Hitchcock and Milburn, but there probably is no one in the world who has better control of the ball.

Major Geoffrey Phipps-Hornby will be the British No. 2 and he will have a special incentive to do well, for his bride of a few weeks will be among the 40,000 spectators in the stands. Phipps-Hornby is a newcomer to the fields of Long Island, but he won fame on the turf of England long ago. Against him will be Malcolm Stevenson, the only member of the American team who never before has played in an international match. In 1914 he was a substitute and in 1921 an operation kept him off the team.

The American substitutes include Eric Pedley, the sensational Californian, Earle W. Hopping, a substitute in 1921, and Robert E. Strawbridge of Philadelphia. The British substitutes are Major E. G. Atkinson, here last year as a member of the picturesque but unsuccessful Indian Tigers, and Major Vivian Lockett, who helped England capture the cup in 1914 and who captained the losing British team of 1921.

ONE of the misfortunes that sometimes waits on genius is that pre-eminence in a special field often obscures other qualities of the same individual scarcely less remarkable. Lewis Carroll, author of "Alice in Wonderland," was wont to lament that the success of that farrago of clever nonsense had caused the public to overlook his noteworthy achievements as a mathematician. A similar plaint might be uttered by "Babe" Ruth, mightiest of home-run hitters. His idolizing public sees him only at the plate and waits breathlessly for his next circuit clout. Too little stress is laid upon the fact that he is a veritable Admirable Crichton of baseball, shining in every department of the game. He is a star of the first magnitude in fielding and base-stealing. Few outfielders in the league have covered more ground or pulled down more "impossible" ones. Despite his bulk, he is quick as a flash in getting to or around the bases. Last year he stole seventeen bases and promises to do as well this season. And it is not to be forgotten that in his early pitching years he was one of the most brilliant south-paws in the game. As an all-around player he ranks with the best in the history of baseball.

American Scientists Dig Up a Treasure-Trove in the Holy Land

THE poet's dictum that there are "sermons in stones" has been proved by archaeological research to be far too narrow. Not only sermons, but the histories of great nations of antiquity have been deduced in part or in whole from the inscriptions and other evidences found on stone tablets and relics that have defied the hand of time, as in the case of the Rosetta Stone, discovered in Palestine, that furnished the key which disclosed the story of the great civilization that once stretched from the Euphrates to the headwaters of the Nile.

A fascinating romance of modern excavation is illustrated in part by the reproductions on the following page of some of the treasures unearthed by the expedition of the University of Pennsylvania under the direction of Drs. Fisher and Rowe, operating at the Hill of Beisan, located about fifty-five miles northwest of Jerusalem and ten miles from Nazareth.

The hill, which rises to a height of about 400 feet and is nearly half a mile in circumference, is a natural fortification of remarkable strength, located on the great highway along which Egyptian armies marched to conquer the East. Around it the tide of battle has ebbed and flowed from a period antedating the birth of history.

Here were found eight superimposed cities, the ashes of some of which indicated that, like ancient Troy, they had been destroyed by fire, probably the last gesture of the conqueror after taking into captivity the vanquished people. Beneath these lay an Egyptian fortress of the time of Seti I. (1313-1291 B. C.), and still further down were found evidences of an occupation dating back to the Bronze Age (about 2000 B. C.).

Two of the most interesting finds were stelae, large inscribed blocks of stone, of the age of Seti I. and of his son, Rameses II. The stela of the latter King records that he had employed captured Semites to work on his City of Rameses in Egypt. This, in the opinion of scholars, may identify him with the Pharaoh of the oppression. Seti's stela supplies interesting information concerning the military organization of Palestine.

Other strata throw light upon occupations by Israelites, Philistines, Greeks, Romans and Crusaders. The "glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome" were illustrated in the former case by traces of an Acropolis—a theatre and a Temple of Bacchus, who was reputed to have been born there—and in the latter by remains of houses built in Roman style and by sculptured busts and torsos.

The remains of an Arabic town shows that these fierce nomads had included the place among their conquests long before the Saracen wave engulfed Asia and Africa and burst upon the shores of Europe. Relics of a cathedral in Byzantine style tell of a time when it was under the power of the degenerate successor of Rome at Constantinople. A great fortress was found, on the walls of which the body of Saul and those of his sons were hung after their defeat by the Philistines on Mount Gilboa, which rises in the vicinity. King David came there later and burned the fortress that had been the scene of Israel's humiliation and defeat. The garrison quarters still remain, the kitchen showing the bread stones and the receptacles for flour.

There are numerous traces of the Crusaders, who fortified the hill with all the devices known to the military science of their day.

The infamous Herod lived there at one time, and the tomb of one of his cousins has been unearthed. The Emperor Diocletian made it his residence during one of the intervals in his persecutions of the Christians. The place is rich in historic associations, and the discoveries already made are among the most important in the history of archaeology.

THERE is a mistaken idea in the minds of many men and women that good manners alone are the key to social success. Good manners are always an asset; but good manners alone will open no doors and lead to no delightful friendships. A well behaved bore has no chance of acceptance in the swift march of American social and business life.

Of course I want to see you!

WHY DOES she want to see him? Why are some men always welcome, while others are regarded as bores? There is a magic in fifteen minutes a day, which will help any man to be more interesting, more welcome, more worth while. The secret is told in a wonderful little book, which you can have free, by mail—but you must send for it now—today.

HONESTLY NOW—do your neighbors find you interesting, or mentally commonplace? Are men in business impressed with your range of information, your cultivation, your ability to think straight and talk well?

The secret is worth knowing. The really popular man, who always has his choice of social and business opportunities, is the man who has learned how to interest other people. He has read wisely; his mind is keen and alert; his conversation is always worth listening to. He may have travelled little, but he knows about more countries than his own. He knows something of history and biography, of the work of great scientists, and of philosophers, poets and dramatists.

And it is all very simple. All the mystery and confusion were taken away from it when Dr. Charles W. Eliot chose from all literature the few great books which are immortal, and arranged them in fifty volumes with notes and reading courses so that any man can get from them the essentials of a liberal education in even fifteen minutes a day.

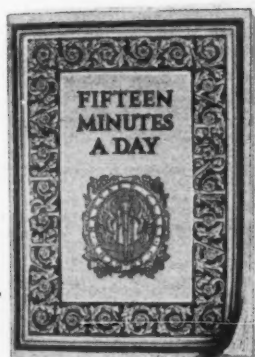

Every well informed man and woman should at least know something about this famous library—

DR. ELIOT'S FIVE-FOOT SHELF OF BOOKS

The free book tells how Dr. Eliot has put into his Five-Foot Shelf "the essentials of a liberal education," how he has so arranged it that even "fifteen minutes a day" are enough, how in pleasant moments of spare time you can get from these Harvard Classics the culture and the broad viewpoint that every university strives to give.

"For me," wrote one man who had sent in the coupon, "your little free book meant a big step forward, and it showed me besides the way to a vast new world of pleasure."

Every reader of this page is invited to have a copy of this handsome and entertaining little book. It is free, will be sent by mail, and involves no obligation of any sort. Merely tear off the coupon and mail it today.
